World, Flesh and Neville

Cosmopolitan bachelor Mr Neville Trotter, Member for Tynemouth, organised a team of his public-spirited colleagues to show candidates for the 1981 Miss World title around the Houses of Parliament. This daring experiment in political education was conducted with much vigour throughout the frosty morning of Monday, 9 November. It was an ideal opportunity for the participating Members to test their powers of communication and persuasion with small groups of shivering foreign ladies. Although none of the Members was caught fumbling for words, most of their guests wore delightful expressions of bemusement underneath painted faces. Mr Nicholas Winterton sought no handicap in the barrier of language and seemed particularly relaxed in the company of the Misses United Kingdom, Eire and Isle of Man. Mr Michael English exhibited a benign and fatherly attitude towards his charges, while Mr Matthew Parris appeared to be somewhat out of his depth. During cocktails a buzz of alarm came over the Attic conversation as Government Whips arrived in search of compromise. Deals were accordingly made.

Other MPs taking part in this fleshly conference included: Tony Nelson, John Lee, Harry Greenway, Chris Patten, David Trippier, Robert McCrindle, David Hunt, Ivan Lawrence and Ray Whitney. Lunch in the Harcourt Room was hosted by Eric and Julia Morley of the Miss World Organisation (Mr Morley was Conservative candidate for Dulwich in the last General Election).
